Op-20-G-jac 14 December 1945.

Dear Navy:

Now that the war is over, I want to tell you how sorry I am that we were unable to reconcile the differences we had with regard to SACO. It was most unfortunate that our aims came into conflict on such important things. I have always felt that you were entirely sincere in your desire to make your activity useful to the Navy and to us in our special field. However, knowing what we did, we honestly could not justify the risk in the light of the possible gain. Fortunately, the end of the war solved our problems very nicely.

I trust that, should we have any future dealings, we may be able to solve them more successfully to our mutual satisfaction.

Sincerely yours,

J. N. WENGER
Captain, U. S. Navy.
